| Biographical details | Dr. Nathan M. Stall received his medical degree from Western University and completed his residency in Internal Medicine and fellowship training in Geriatric Medicine at the University of Toronto. He is currently a research fellow at Women's College Research Institute at Women's College Hospital and is completing a PhD in Clinical Epidemiology & Health Care Research at the Institute of Health Policy, Management and Evaluation (IHPME) at the University of Toronto. His doctoral research uses large administrative databases to study the population health impact of caregiving for dementia and the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on Ontario's long-term care homes, residents and staff. His other research interests include drug safety for older adults, sex- and gender-based determinants of ageing, and health care utilization among persons with dementia. He is the author of nearly 100 peer-reviewed scientific publications and has presented his work at national and international scientific meetings. During the COVID-19 pandemic he served as the Assistant Scientific Director of Ontario's COVID-19 Science Advisory Table and sat on the Modeling Consensus Table and the Congregate Care Setting Working Group. He is a Network Science Advisor for CanCOVID, a federally funded organization which rapidly produces and disseminates credible knowledge to help inform public health guidance during the COVID-19 pandemic and post-pandemic future. His research is supported by the University of Toronto Department of Medicine's Eliot Phillipson Clinician-Scientist Training Program and the Vanier Canada Graduate Scholarship. He has been a staff geriatrician at Sinai Health in Toronto since 2017. His clinical work focuses on acute care geriatrics. Dr. Stall attends on the inpatient Geriatric Medicine Consultation Service and on the Internal Medicine Clinical Teaching Units at Mount Sinai Hospital. |
